Chapter 1 by Sammi Fay

"Danny, I don't want to hear it. I won custody over Grace, so leave her and myself alone!"

Grace sighed. Her mom had been arguing with her dad over the phone. Her tone was getting more and more angered with each sentence. The volume of the conversation taking place over the phone seemed louder in the small car.

"I DON'T care! This was dealt with months ago!" Her mom yelled so loud that Grace began to get uncomfortable... and scared. Grace felt her fear of her mom grow when the car began to accelerate.

The young girl sat straighter in her seat and glanced outside. The speed limit sign whizzed by and Grace's eyes skimmed its words, "25 miles per hour."

Grace glanced at the speedometer of the car. 45 mph and increasing. How could her mom not realize how fast she was going? Grace looked over. Not only was her mom having an aggressive phone call with her father, but she was angrily texting someone. "Mom, you need to slow down!" Grace yelled over her mother's voice.

But it was too late. In the seconds Grace looked over to her mother, she, along with her mother, had failed to see the rail that would come flying over a dirt. A pair of screams filled the car as it went flying.

A voice yelling through the phone was the only thing that could be heard in the soon silent car,
"Abby! Abby? What happened?"
